A DESPERATE REMEDY.

A Melancholy Soldier at the Washington Barracks Shoots Himself.
"Oh! I've shot too high!" was the hurried exclamation the hospital steward at the Washington Barracks heard this morning, about 1 o'clock, just after the sharp crack of a musket-shot resounded through the halls and corridors of the building. At once he rushed in the direction whence the exclamation appeared to come, and entering a small room near one of the large sleeping apartments he found Sergeant James Campbell of Battery K lying prostrate on the floor, while the blood gushed from a large hole in his breast, just above the heart. Beside him lay a musket with which he had done the desperate act. The barrel was still warm from the discharge. The smoke had not yet escaped from the room. Hastily the doctor was summoned and Campbell was borne to a cot, and efforts were made to staunch the blood. But although the heart was untouched, it was evident that the wound was a fatal one. The arteries had been severed and were shooting out the blood so rapidly that the wounded man was steadily growing weaker and weaker. All hopes of his recovery were given up. come, and entering a small room near one weaker. All hopes of his recovery were given up.

It seems that Campbell, for some time, had been laboring under a fit of depression. This so preyed upon him that, it is thought, he became unable to endure it any longer. We arrived day before yesterday at the barracks and had been confined in the hospital since then. This morning, about 1 o'clock, he arcse, and watching his opportunity, stole from the hospital about 1 o'clock, he arose, and watching his opportunity, stole from the hospital ward into a small room, just off the neighboring corridor. Here, as he expected, he found a musket. Placing the muzzle against his breast, he put his root on the trugger and pressed it. The bullet went through his body with terrific force, ploughing its way through his back, just under the left shoulder-blade. It cut a gash in the door-frame and buried itself in the wall of the corridor, twenty feet distant. The wound was a very ugly one. Campbelt had been stationed at Fort Barraneas, Fla., and had been in ill-health for a long time. He was unmarried. He was very popular among the soldiers, being a jovial, hearty, free-and-easy man.

At 3:10 o'clock this afternoon Campbell was still alive, but very low. The civil-service rules except from the examinations the chiefs of divisions in the several departments. The President has decided, on a presentation of the matter by the commission, that the chiefs of divisions mentioned in the manual equally with the others are exceptions from the examinations. A Wall of Water Fifty Feet High Sweeps DREVER, Col., June 5.—It is believed that two lives were lost Wednesday by the bursting of the dam of the Beaver Park reservoir in St. Vrian canon. The missing men have been searched for, but were not found. Two miners in Central Gulch, who barely escaped with their lives, describe the scene as thrilling. The gulch was quite narrow, and a wall of water fifty feet high came sweeping down, moving bowiders weighing several tons and everything else in its path. These men lost everything else in its path. These men lost everything but their lives. Not a barn remains on the ranches in the canon. Some dwellings were out of the reach of the water and were saved: others were badly wrecked. Four irrigating ditches have been nearly destroyed, at a critical period for the crops, which need the water supply. It is thought a waterspoint in the mountains caused the dam to break, although the ranchment below it had been in constant fear of its giving way. The debris is piled in the roads twelve feet deep in some places. At other points bridges are gone, interfering with travel. The damage is estimated at fully $40,000 and may be greater if the ditches are not repaired in time to save the crops. found. Two miners in Central Gulch, who

Cluverius Guilty.

Cluverius Guilty.

Richmond, Va., June 5.—Thomas J. Cluverius has been found guilty of murder in the first degree. He was on trial at Richmond for twenty-six days for the murder of Lillian Madison, near the old reservoir, on the night of March 13. It was one of the most interesting trials in the criminal angulas of Virginia. The prisoner had little or no sympathy in the community. While the evidence was entirely circumstantial, a strong chain of guilt was woven about Cluverius, though in the opinion of many it needed some important links to make it complete. The verdict was rendered at 0:30 last night, and five minutes after it was announced the news had spread all over the city. It was everywhere received with manifestations of delight. In the upper portion of the city ladies went from door to door telling what was considered good news. Such evidence of pleasure has not been shown by the Richmond public since the election of Gleveland. Indeed, several enthusiastic parties cried out, "This looks like last election day," Messra, Ayette and Meredith, the lawyers for the prosecution, were overwhelmed with congratulations, and both received from the ladies handsome baskets of flowers, accompanied with cards bearing the words: "Thanks for your noble defense of the dead Liftian." Mr. Henry Keppler, the foreman of the jury last night said that before half of the evidence was in for the prosecution the jury thought the case a damaging one to the prisoner; that when it was all in they were well convinced of his guilt, but that every one of the jurymen hoped that counsel for the defense would introduce some evidence to clear the prisoner. They felt the gravity of the case to the extent that they would have preferred to render a verdict of not guilty without leaving the jury-box. Probably what weighed most with the jury was the denial of Cluverius that he had seen the girl at all since last September.
